The State of Colorado saw significant economic growth in 2014, however this did not occur uniformly around our state and there were also some ominous issues that could affect economic development in the future. Will the statewide growth trend continue in 2015 and beyond? The Denver Business Journal is naturally focused on economic development and has provided extensive recurring coverage on economic development issues of particular interest to counties, including urban renewal reform, business personal property tax, immigration policy, water rights and supply, oil and gas regulation and the plunging price of fossil fuels. Join the editor of the Denver Business Journal, Neil Westergaard, as he offers a distinctly non-governmental perspective on the state of our economy and what he sees on the horizon for Colorado’s economic health.

During this presentation, we’ll see examples of how other state and local government agencies are making extensive use of ESRI’s ArcGIS platform, and learn about new technologies that can enable people in your organization to take that GIS information to the next level – by extending its reach beyond the GIS professional, to the decision maker, and to the public. With ongoing demands for more courtrooms, more jail space, and adequate transportation infrastructure – not to mention the never-ending job of maintaining existing county shops, offices and equipment - it is important to have a basic understanding of how a county can finance its capital construction needs. Dee Wisor is an attorney with Butler Snow in Denver and has a wealth of experience assisting local governments in meeting these challenges. In this session, he will provide an overview of public finance for counties, including the types of financing available, the parties involved in a financing, election considerations, debt limitations, and tax and securities laws to be aware of, and also answer whatever questions you may have about financing for your county.

Sharing Services Across Counties – Public Health Examples

Torreys Peak 1-2

Colorado has many examples of counties sharing services in the area of public health, including a newly developed collaboration in the San Luis Valley. Shared services may take a variety of forms including an improved structure for managing and evaluating shared employees and individual programs to engaging with existing community alliances. The idea of sharing services across counties transcends public health into other areas of county government as well. This session will highlight current efforts and ‘lessons learned’ that may be useful to communities that wish to implement a shared service model.

In this session, Cynthia Moses-Nedd, the Department of Interior’s Local Government Liaison, and Randy Philips, the US Forest Service’s county liaison, will provide an overview of the opportunities for cooperation with federal agencies, what federal laws require, what is expected from counties that wish to coordinate, and their departmental approaches to cooperating agency status.

Partners in the Unincorporated – County and Special District Relationships

Torreys Peak 1-2

As local governments that also provide infrastructure and services to the unincorporated areas of our state, special districts are important partners in serving county residents. Special districts can take many forms but a good working relationship between a county and a special district is critical to the success of both. Join Ann Terry, the executive director of the Special District Association, and Michael Valdez, SDA’s Policy Director, for an overview of special districts, including how they can be formed, what powers they have, the laws they have to follow as a governmental entity and coordination with special districts in county land use decision-making. They will also identify some opportunities for even better county and special district collaboration.

40 Years of Supporting Community-Based Government

Since 1975 SDA has been assisting community-based government, and together with county partners, helping our members fulfill the vital roles they play in their communities.

» Board member and manager training and development
» Eligibility to join the Colorado Special Districts Property and Liability Pool and the Colorado Employer Benefit Trust (CEBT)
» Advocates at the local and state level
» Fostering essential relationships with county government

Large or small, urban or rural, SDA’s more than 1,550 member districts share a common goal:
provide the best possible services for the citizens they serve.

» Fire districts
» Park and recreation districts
» Sanitation districts
» Water conservation districts
» Water conservancy districts
» Library districts

Find out how SDA is strengthening the special districts in your county, and how we can help you serve your constituents, by visiting www.sdaco.org.
